Chronicle Tenets

Don't let the system's blind spots become an excuse.

Every case gets a real answer, even the ones no court will hear.

Never let someone else pay for what you missed.

(Suggested - confirm with the table.)

Touchstones

Open - still to be built out.
Candidates: a mentor in the DA's office who does not know why she has changed; a defendant she helped convict while distracted by the real case; someone from the original case still out there, unaware of what almost happened to them.

Creed Fields

CREED: INQUISITIVE
Counters threats by studying them, finding the pattern, working the angle.

DRIVE: ATONEMENT
She believes she failed to stop something dangerous once, knowingly or not, and is trying to settle that debt.

Vivienne Okafor is an Assistant District Attorney in New York, seven years in, sharp enough that she has stopped being surprised when opposing counsel recognises her name before she has said it. She built her reputation on being unshakeable - the kind of prosecutor who does not blink, does not rattle, closes strong. Then she lost a case she should have won.

The defendant walked. Clean acquittal, no technicality, just a jury that believed a story Vivienne knew was not true. She spent months afterward picking the trial apart, convinced she had missed something in the evidence or the witness prep. What she eventually found was not a legal error. It was a pattern of details she had dismissed as irrelevant - because they made no rational sense - that only made sense once she stopped assuming the defendant was human.

She never got to retry the case; double jeopardy saw to that. What she got instead was the absolute certainty that something walked out of her courtroom that should never have been found not guilty by any court, and that certainty has not left her. She still works the DA's office by day. At night she is trying to make sure it does not happen again - and quietly hunting for a way to finish what the trial could not.
